

My living room

Time of me with my family disappearing

Twenty records are all taken when me and my family are at home.

My collection can't show the whole picture of me and my family but it captures what my family do in the living room. Reflects and make me think how I should spend more time with my family, how daily life of me and my family is actually precious and has to be treasured. My collection expresses through text, image and voice recordings.

- Why this one, and not the others you considered?

The living room of my home is where I talk and spend time with my family the most. This area shares lots of collective memories for all of us. On the other hand, the living room is where we first walk into when we return home, it is one of the best room/area to represent the concept family and home to me. Therefore I chose to record the daily life of this place through my pov.

- Who would notice if it disappeared tomorrow? Who would not notice at all?

My whole family are going to notice the disappearance of it. The living room of my home is an area that seems normal and common, yet it actually gives me the best feeling of family and home. Recalling my childhood memories, I once moved to another estate with my family, the living room was never the same, it's comfy and even bigger, however, the 3months stay in there just felt odd and unfamiliar, throughout living in my home for 20 years, lots of image and memory belongs and stays to that particular living room.

If my living room somehow disappears, I don't think im going to be happy or accept it in all of a sudden, the living room has always been more than an area of my home to me.

Maybe no one will ever notice how my living room disappears, but through the living room of this artwork, I believe I could definitely express the message of how spending time with family is treasurable and the way it losses through time everyday.

- Could you go back and record it again next week? What happens to your collection if you cannot?

I think I can record it again next week. But it also brings me a lot of questions. As I record my living room, I question myself, how long will I continue to stay in this flat as I grow up continuously, as I move away and start my own family. My parents are turning old and planning to retire from work (staying home even more often), meanwhile I have found myself staying home less often as I grow up, I have school and part time job, I also prefer to hang out with my friends than staying at home during my free time. Every time I stay in my living room, I reflect and think of how fast time flies, it reminds of me how I should care more about my family. Time flies within a blink, you never feel that you are losing a specific moment and time until you realise it's too late.

About the twenty records

- What is the same in all twenty?

I sat in the exact same spot to record all twenty records, it is the spot that I usually sit in during dinner or whenever I stay in the living room. I hope this makes it easier for the audience to understand what I see and hear, to see how things take place from my pov.

- Which record is the odd one out? Why did you keep it in?

The record with no special sound is the odd one, sometimes I go to my living room for a cup of water during midnight when I couldn't sleep. The emptiness of the living room gives me pictures of what my home or my family look like in the future.

- Did you record what was easy to record, or what actually mattered?

I tried my best to record the most basic and ordinary slice of life, I did not want to make things dramatic. However, I had to persuade my dad to let me take photos of him as he does not like being photographed.
